What is a Groundhog Anyway?

We know February 2nd is Groundhog Day, but have you ever wondered what a groundhog is? A groundhog is a rodent from the squirrel family. It can also be called a woodchuck or a whistle pig because it whistles when it is scared. They live in many parts of the United States and Canada.

Groundhogs are small animals. They only weigh about ten to fifteen pounds. They are covered in thick, gray fur and have a short, bushy tail. Their strong legs and thick claws help them dig large burrows, or holes, in the ground.

Groundhogs really do hibernate. They burrow themselves deep in the ground where they stay during the cold winter months. When it starts to warm up, they emerge from their holes and begin to look for food, which includes plants and small insects.

1. What type of animal is a groundhog? _____

2. Describe what a groundhog looks like. _____

3. How do groundhogs survive the cold winter? _____
