The stereotype is that those who end up in services such as the moon or the NXIVM are desperate, disturbed or disabled intellectually. We tend to believe in this stereotype, because out of the self-protection, we want to think that there is no end in such a group. But what I found talking to dozens of survivors and worship scholars is that the people who ended up in the history of the history people who believed that an answer to the most urgent problems in the world was out there, and that they could be part of it. And when things were difficult, they were willing to stick. "The people who end up in the history of history, the wisites were incredibly brilliant, open-minded and service oriented. I wrote this book for my father. I grew up ecstatic with marginal groups and their believers, partly because of my father: as a teenager, he was forced to join a worship. In 1969, when my father, Craig Montell, was fourteen, his absentee, a communist and stepmother father's transportation card decided they wanted us on the blooming countercultural movement. Then they moved the young Craig and his two children of the child in a remote socialist community out of Francisco called "Sanios". I cut my teeth into Synanon's riveting tales of my father, who escaped seventeen years and continued to become a prolific neuroscientist. My father was always as generous with his narrative, repeating the same histories of SYNANONÃ ¢ s quarters, from ritualStica Synanon à ¢ Game ¢ (more about it in the book), and of course the special language that used in Synanon for Build Solidarity, Independent Thinking of Squash, obscure truths, encourage us dichotomies and emotionally carry experiences in such a way that no other way of life seemed possible. It was my father who instilled in me my sense of skepticism, but also my intense enthusiasm and curiosity, and my love of telling stories. I dedicated this book to him.
